Karyn L. Pomerantz is a Research Scientist and Adjunct Professor in the Department of Prevention and Community Health at The George Washington University School of Public Health and Health Services. At the School, she teaches a course in community health information resources, develops professional development programs, advises practicum students, and conducts 2 health information outreach projects.

She chairs the Health Disparities Committee of the Metropolitan Washington Public Health Association.

Karyn's professional and personal interests are driven by the same powerful commitment - to fight racism and injustice. "Public health epitomizes this struggle by focusing on the conditions that contribute to health," she says, explaining her work in support of living wage legislation and other labor-related benefits, as an advocate for HIV and AIDS services and as a critic of biodeterminism.
